Obon, Koso-ki, and Pope Francis

Before talking about the past – my trip to Rome in June – I want to talk about the special events coming up in August. On Saturday August 15 we are having our annual Bon Odori, joyful circle dances in honor of our loved ones. We moved it later this year to avoid being on the same Saturday as other Japanese community events (unfortunately that strategy didn't work – Kokyo Taiko is playing at the Chicago Botanic Garden's Japanese Festival that day). Even if you can't make it on that date, you are welcome to enjoy the dances at the five practice sessions (see Events and Calendar for the times).

On Sunday August 16 is the Obon service. It is a time to remember all our loved ones in a solemn way, and in particular to pay respect to those who passed away since the last Obon. Those names are found on the Hatsubon list on page 2. If we made an error in listing your loved one, please let us know before Obon.

This year we are having a special commemoration of Koso-ki, the memorial for Haya Akegarasu (1877-1954). Rev. Marvin Harada of the Orange County Buddhist Church will conduct a Koso-ki seminar on Saturday, August 29 and will be our guest speaker at the Koso-ki service on Sunday, August 30. Rev. Harada while studying to be a minister, spent a half-year in Chicago studying under Rev. Gyomay Kubose. When he went to Japan, he wanted to learn more about Rev. Kubose's teacher and studied Akegarasu's works extensively. Rev. Harada has translated much of Akegarasu's commentary on the Larger Sutra and he refers to it in his lectures throughout California. The Koso-ki seminar will be a great opportunity to learn from one of the foremost English-speaking experts on Akegarasu.

Now getting back to the past. As part of the Catholic-Buddhist Dialogue from June 23 to June 27 in Rome, our group of about fifty Catholic and Buddhist representatives from the United States was granted a private audience with Pope Francis on June 24. Although some people prepared speeches to introduce themselves or advocate some cause, all I could do was bow when I met the Pope. I recall Rev. Gyoko Saito captured in a photo in the Los Angeles Times, bowing when he met the Pope John Paul II at an interfaith event in 1987.

As much as it is a thrill to shake the hand of a worldwide celebrity, looking back on the experience I realize the amazing thing I witnessed was a very genuinely humble man showing total respect to each person he greeted. It didn't matter if they were clergy or lay, male or female – he showed his heart of loving-kindness equally to each one of us.

I learned much from the Dialogue and was inspired by several of the speakers, especially the Buddhist nuns, who spoke so concretely about people who put Buddhism into practice. Some of you have already heard me speak about the Dialogue at Sunday services and I've got much more to touch on in future Sunday talks.

In case you're wondering what I talked about, I was on the panel with the topic "Social issues that need to be addressed today." All of us on the panel agreed to talk specifically about our own locations as a way of suggesting ways we, the Buddhists and Catholics, can work together.

So in the context of the conference, here's some of what I said:

BTC President

Note: There is no message from the president this month due to Bill's hospitalization in July. He is at home and recovering well. We hope to see him feeling better and back at the temple soon. A special thanks to Bill, who again chaired the Natsu Matsuri Committee this year. See pages 4 and 5 for 2015 Natsu Matsuri coverage.

Bon Odori Dance Practices start August 3

Men, women and children: get out your dancing slippers (“zori”). Bon Odori, the joyous remembrance of lost loved ones, is coming up. There will be five practice sessions leading at 7:30 pm on Aug. 3 (Mon), 5 (Wed), 7 (Fri), 10 (Mon), & 12 (Wed), with optional Bon Odori performance Aug 15 (Sat).

Even if you are unsure about participating in Bon Odori, please come to any of the practice sessions just for the fun of it, to reunite with old friends and meet new ones and to get a bit of exercise in. The dances are based on traditional Japanese folk dancing and consist of simple moves in repeated patterns.

You can bring your own props or borrow what we have at the temple – folding fans (“sensu”), round fans (“uchiwa”), towels (“tenugui”) and wooden castanets (“kachi-kachi”). Feel free to wear kimono or whatever you’d like. Everyone is welcome, so bring your family and friends of all ages.

REMINDER: Labor Day Weekend, September 4-6 2015 Eastern Buddhist League Conference

The 2015 Eastern Buddhist League Conference will be held in Cleveland, Ohio over Labor Day weekend, Friday, September 4 to Sunday, September 6. This year’s theme is, “I Go to the Sangha for Guidance.” What does it mean for us and others today? What is the role and purpose of the sangha in the world? How can the sangha communicate to others the peace and joy of leading a Shin life?

Author and scholar Jeff Wilson will deliver the keynote address and participate in the workshops. He has written numerous books and articles on the development of Buddhism in America, including several works on the place of Shin Buddhism. He is contributing editor for Tricycle magazine and author of the books Buddhism of the Heart, Dixie Dharma, and Mindful America.

Cleveland Buddhist Temple has negotiated a great group rate at the new Westin Cleveland Downtown hotel. The Midwest Buddhist Temple is planning to get a bus and hopes BTC delegates will join them. BTC should have registration packets available at the information counter starting in May.

More information and online registration is available at: www.EBL2015.weebly.com.

An Ugly Eagle

By Eshin Justin Woodward

Editor's Note: We received this poem from past BTC member, Justin Woodward. Justin often lent his musical talents (keyboard, trumpet) at Sunday services and took care of the weekly cleaning. Several years ago, he moved to Oregon to pursue graduate studies in music and now lives at the Buddha Eye Temple (Soto Zen) in Eugene, where he recently took the Bodhisattva precepts and received the Dharma Name "Eshin." His poem describes his encounter with Other Power.

An Ugly Eagle

An ugly eagle flew across my vision.
 Lost in discerning thoughts and memories
 Of a life, a name, a habit no longer lived,
 I did not perceive the eagle's beauty
 Until I felt her liberation;
 From limb, from tree, and from ground;
 Blow across my face,
 Carrying with it my breath
 And my distraction.

Natsu Matsuri 2015:

Thank You, Thank You, Thank You from the Craft Group

By Alice Murata

Our craft group is grateful to everyone who helped us make Natsu Matsuri 2015 successful. This year we made pillows to raffle instead of the usual handmade quilt, and for the third time, Vernon Shabunia of Portland, Oregon was the grand prize winner. All three times he generously passed on the prizes so that others could benefit. Alice and Kay Nojiri of Lombard took his place as the grand prize winners. Let's keep our fingers crossed so that next time Vernon wins a monetary prize. For the first time we had a second prize of batik and kimono pillows, which were won by Janice Shighihara. Thanks to all who supported our raffle.

We are very grateful and fortunate to have many talented friends and relatives among our friendships who can be counted on to help us raise funds. Special this year were pillows designed by artists Gene Skala and Adamandia Kapsalis for our craft raffle. In addition to our talented craft group member, Fumiko Takata's very cute wool animals and objects, we featured necklaces designed by Noreen Enkoji's daughter, Aileen Rosen.

Many donations from outside of the craft group were donated to us. A huge thanks to Hisayo Ashikaga, Karen Baier, Bill Bohlman, Juanita Burris, Dennis Chan, Jane Ike, Marion Ishii, Shirleen Kajiwarra, Eric Kato, Gwen Kato, Ingeborg Kohler, Stuart Mizuta, Laura Muraoka, Anna Nagata, Lisa and Stan Oda, Dennie Okuhara, Lynn Osato, Lisa and Keith Philibert, Tak and Tommi Tomiyama, Lori Wing, Ann Yi, Betty Yoshioka, and the estates of Mimi Hansen, Merry Hirata, and Jennie Watanabe. This list may not be complete and we apologize if we omitted your name. Donations and purchases of Japanese goods, gift items, handmade items, and other treasures are gratefully acknowledged.

We had assistance to set up, manage, and clean up the gift section. Thanks to Rachel Abbinanti, Karen Baier, Juanita Burris, Nancy Epperson, Mary Getty, Lynnell Long, Laura Muraoka, Linda Tademoto, and the chicken crew.

Friends of BTC helped make the wonderful BTC Cultural exhibit of temari balls organized by Jane and Jerry Morishige even better. Arigato gozimashita to Hayako Kikuchi, Kimi Kimura, Hisako Kometani, Ikue Matsuda, Alice Murata, and Florence Yoshida.

After Natsu Matsuri ended, the craft group gave unsold items to use for BTC picnic prizes and to Heiwa Terrace for bingo prizes and handmade baby hats for their knitting project.

This year's Craft Group members include Ruth Abbinanti, Mandy Kapsalis, Alice Murata, Shizue Nakanishi, Arlene Nozawa, Fumi Takata, Ruby Tsuji, and Beth Windisch.

This season we lost our longtime mentor, Jennie Watanabe. She is greatly missed. Thanks to her family for the generous donation made to our craft group.

Enlightenment In Talking

By Candy Minx

“Enlightenment is here for everyone at the present moment. The only thing you need do to to become enlightened is drop all concepts, ideas and beliefs, also about enlightenment; leave your ego; leave mind behind; drop the thinking that you are not enlightened, that something is missing; or give up seeking. In this process, there is also a total experience of everything as divine, or a willingness to embrace everything. Beyond the individual mind and all collected concepts, there is consciousness, Nothingness, non-individuality, no sense of self, Emptiness, God or the divine. There is a clear emphasis that everyone is already enlightened – we only have to realize it.

– Anamika Angsbacka

Arjuna defines enlightenment as the absolute willingness to embrace everything.

– Bette Alvers

[Quotes from “The Satsang Network,” by Lislotte Frisk, a study of Westerners claiming to have attained enlightenment.]

Oh okay, no problem. I can do that, while I pay the rent, pick up the kids, make a big sale at work, get along with my neighbors who just cut down all the trees on the street, and drive through rush hour traffic.

One of the reasons I enjoy the story of Arjuna, the protagonist in the Bhagavad Gita, is because it portrays how it feels to begin to practice Buddhism: Arjuna’s doubts and challenges mirror some of the same aspects we find in Siddhartha’s narrative arc. These two stories examine the transition from ignorance to awareness of the self, or the mind, in the context of community.

I also love the stories of how other people began to practice Buddhism. The anecdotes or accounts of someone coming to Buddhism often convey conflict, change or crisis. Or a turning point. That turning point might offer a paradigm shift, peak experience or “a-ha moments”. A paradigm shift is a surprise from learning. Three examples of secular narratives built on paradigm shifts in mainstream culture are a genre within science fiction called “first contact”, the “coming out” accounts of LGBT persons, and the discursive practices of AA meetings.

In Shin Buddhism, each and every being is embraced in the Great Compassion of what is referred to as the Unbounded Light and Life, Amitabha/Amitayus – sometimes translated as “Other Power” or “Power Beyond Self.”

The problem is this “Amida” is talked about as some far-off divine power when actually the great Pure Land masters teach us that “Amida” literally means the Light (wisdom) and Life (compassion) that is all around us and deep within us. It is easy to feel embraced by the love of our family and friends and those who seem very similar to us in appearance, mental/physical ability and socio-economic status. But we really can’t talk about Oneness unless we are open to the Light and Life of those outside of our comfortable circle. Oneness includes all the “others.”

I interpret the Dharma as opening up the temple to all of our immediate neighborhood, especially where there is so much brokenness – people struggling on low or no incomes, dealing with disabilities and substance abuse, the stress of criminal and domestic violence, racism and mistreatment by the police and other authorities. Our temple must always

Learning and thinking about things in a different way can be very scary. We might associate learning with school, where if we didn’t learn, we failed. Or if we changed our ideas about something, that means we didn’t know something before. We associate being wrong as painful, so painful, that pride will defend our side of the story at any cost. Being humble is associated with weakness in the United States. Fear of being wrong may prevent us from talking about how we might have changed or how we might open up to change. Fear of failure might prevent us from being open-minded. We associate failure with shame. Change and changing our sense of who we are, can also be labeled weak, or flaky, or wishy-washy.

So how do we approach philosophical ideas that seem so different than belief systems we grew up with? How do we balance our fear of being wrong, with the wish of being open-minded? Let’s face it, even “Buddhism-lite” is very different than the dominant global cultural values.

When we think of how crisis sometimes brings a change we might also see how we seek a crisis in order to change. We associate a change in thinking with extreme circumstances like jumping out of an aircraft, traveling to an exotic location, ingesting psychotropic plants, taking seminars or hearing of a new scientific discovery. Those may be valid ways to experience the surprise of learning, but most of us only have those options available to us a few times in a our life.

And this is why I love hearing other peoples’ experiences with Buddhism in their daily life because it helps to open me up to the surprise of learning without breaking my leg careening through the sky with a parachute. Talking and listening is universal. It’s fairly economical too.

What does all this have to do with August’s movie night? Well, it’s a documentary of people, experts if you will, talking about Buddhism. Listening to their views on Buddhism potentially gives us something to think about in a new format. The film is called Wisdom and Compassion. I came across a recommendation of this movie on a blog. I surfed the internet but couldn’t find a copy of it anywhere for sale or download. I had to email the blog and eventually got a response in my email from the director of the movie. His email told me where to mail a money order for a copy of the DVD. I went to a currency exchange, got a offer the Dharma to all who want to hear it by trying to be welcoming and accessible to all the “others.” [I spoke of one man who has trouble speaking clearly due to a head injury as an example of someone living nearby who feels at home at our Sunday services and study group meetings.]

But another thing we can offer our community is our space – to let them know it’s okay to come inside and see our temple rather than treating it as a fortress for our members. The community forum on mental health services in April was a wonderful opportunity to bring people into our temple and to learn about their concerns. During the summer our temple is hosting the English classes in the Chinese Mutual Aid Association’s citizenship program. This is a chance for these immigrants from all over the world to feel welcomed. And August 2nd our temple will be hosting the Treasures of Uptown Interfaith Coalition’s public forum on homelessness.

Lastly, I wish to express my gratitude to our Sangha, whose untiring efforts resulted in another successful Natsu Matsuri. The activities prior to, during, and afterward is always a lot of work. It is truly the Pure Land to be amid such selfless cooperation and busyness!

money order while on the the way downtown with my husband. I had a stamped envelope ready with a note to include with my money order. I couldn't see a mailbox. So my husband and I thought we would find a mailbox downtown after we got off the CTA train. We arrive downtown and begin our errands. After a couple of hours we stopped for a drink and I realized I had completely forgotten about my envelope to mail. I had lost it. I was pretty sure I had lost it on the train. All I could do was hope someone would find my envelope and drop it in a mailbox. And then I just let go of the whole thing and carried on with life at hand. About a month later the DVD arrived in the mail. Wow! That's so cool, I thought. I looked forward to sharing this story sometime.

Talking about Buddhism, especially with other practitioners, about its application in daily life offers an opportunity for paradigm shifts. I feel it's a sort of reset button for the mind. I believe it's an intrinsic part of the dharma. And I believe ordinary, everyday regular practitioners of Buddhism are every bit experts as the folks in this amazing film called Wisdom and Compassion. After all, a regular average person in the world practiced wisdom and compassion by putting my lost envelope in the mail. Let's give each other some credit, some respect, and keep on talking and sharing our practice with each other. Being able to embrace everything is not only a way to be humble and listen to others, it's also a way to understand that everyone is learning different things at different times.

Wisdom and Compassion is narrated by Peter Coyote featuring interviews with Robert Thurman, John Daido Looi, H.H. Sakya Trizin, Donald Lopez and others. Movie night is August 18 at 7 p.m. All are welcome and admission is free. Refreshments will be available and guests are welcome to bring snacks to share.
